(Research isn't just for researchers!)

Welcome: Congresswoman Judy Chu via video

Guest Speaker MSNBC News Correspondent Richard Lui

Screening of film "Reunification" by Alvin Tsang

Where: New York University School of Medicine
550 First Avenue, New York, New York 10016

When: Thursday, June 29, 2017, 8:30 a.m. – 4:30 p.m.
Friday, June 30, 2017, 8:30 a.m. – 2:30 p.m.

Who: Anybody interested in the health / mental health of AAPIs.

This is a unique and exciting opportunity to learn from those who have lived the experience, those working with communities, doing the research and writing the policies. Hear from Congresswoman Judy Chu and MSNBC journalist and news correspondent, Richard Lui about why health and mental health are critical issues that are core to our changing political dialog.

Developing a national research agenda is for everyone, not just researchers. Consumers share their experiences of what works, what doesn't; service providers offer insight into programs and intervention strategies that go beyond Western models of care and may incorporate traditional AAPI healing practices; policy makers write policies that help determine who gets what services and how resources are allocated. Students can learn from experts as they begin their careers. Researchers collect and analyze the data to identify what constitutes best practices models of care. There is also a greater need to follow a community based participatory research approach that includes conversations with other stakeholders ~ everyone should and can have input into what data we collect and how it can be used to improve our lives. Please join us!
